

UNCITRAL Model Law on Electronic Signatures (2001)

Article 6: Compliance with a requirement for a signature. An electronic signature is considered to be reliable if the signature creation data are linked to the signatory and no other person, and if any alteration after signing is detectable.

This model law establishes the principle of technological neutrality, meaning laws should not favor one signature technology over another, ensuring equal treatment under the law.